Special Populations

The Division of Drug and Alcohol and its contracted providers will give preference to treatment to the following populations:

- ◆ Pregnant injection drug users;
- ◆ Pregnant substance users;
- ◆ Injection drug users;
- ◆ Overdose survivors; and
- ◆ Veterans

To ensure that pregnant women, and injection drug users (IDU) have access to needed behavioral and physical health services while waiting to access specific drug and alcohol treatment services, they are offered interim services.

The interim services specifically addressed are those services that reduce adverse health effects of substance abuse, promote the health of the individual, and reduce the risk of transmission of a disease until the individual is admitted to the treatment program. Therefore, interim services include, but are not limited to; counseling/education about HIV/TB, the risks of needle sharing, and the risks of transmission to sexual partners and infants. For pregnant women, interim services shall include counseling on the effects of alcohol and drug use to the fetus and referral to prenatal care.

Pregnant women or an IDU that has been identified as needing a specific level of care that is not currently available, shall be offered a more intensive level (or lower level of care, if more appropriate), as a way to bridge the time between the assessment and admission to the unavailable treatment.

Overdose survivors shall be given priority access to treatment services without restrictions. Funding is available to veterans regardless of their discharge status and benefits.
